A Government Assay Office.

One year ago, when the gold standard was just ended, the all-potent nation before the country was to read the redundant paper currency of the nation with the view of securing a specie basis, we ventured to propose a plan to that end, which we are gratified to observe by recent eastern advices is in a fair way of being adopted, so far as this city is concerned. We claim no credit for having originated this scheme, since, though entirely original with us, it seems so entirely simple in itself and easy of adoption, that we wonder it has not before been suggested to the able minds controlling the financial affairs of the nation.

Compelled by the necessities of the late war to pile up a vast public debt represented by paper promises to pay, the policy of the Government manifestly was to inaugurate a system by which the stimulus of specie to foreign countries should be checked, and the constantly increasing production of the precious metals from our own unmining resources be so controlled as to regulate their value in domestic degree, and, at the same time, draw a large tributary of revenue into the national treasury. The grand desideratum being—1st, to get a sufficiency of specie into the public vaults, without a ruinous sacrifice, to pay the interest on the public debt promptly, and thus bring interest-bearing bonds to par;—2d, gradually to withdraw the paper issue until the redemption of specie payment should be practicable—the troublesome question was, the means to be used in reaching the end desired, not a few in their zeal submitting propositions, which would have effectually killed the goose that laid the golden egg. Prominent among these were, numerous devices, some of them en masse, looking to the taxation of the mines. Any direct law of this character would defeat itself, because every one at all familiar with the subject knows full well that, not the mines, but their product only, can be successfully or justly taxed.

Our proposition was both just and practicable. It was for Congress to pass a law requiring that all precious metals should be stamped at offices established for that purpose, and by officers properly appointed, who should stamp on the product of all such mines the coin value, deducting for this service a percentage sufficient to defray the expense and pay a revenue into the national treasury. The mining regions to be divided into convenient districts for this purpose, and no gold, silver, or platinum of any kind, being saleable by law unless so assayed and stamped.

The various ways in which this plan recommends itself will be seen at a glance. It taxes the product of the mines, strictly according to the value officially stamped thereon, in a manner the least objectionable that could be imagined. The reason is, that the miner pays for a service less than he actually loses in the ordinary sales of dust, or other forms of the raw product, to dealers therein, his losses constituting their profit in trade. That these profits are not small it requires no careful observation to decide. There would be no temptation to evade the law because the dealer could afford to pay more for dust than the value affixed by the Government's authorized agents. The bars thus stamped would possess a current value as coin, when that might be necessary, and the tendency would be to introduce the national currency into the mining regions, drawn on deposit in local national banks, as a matter of obvious convenience.

Regarded in every point of view, the scheme, so far as we can discover, commends itself to careful consideration. By its provision every dollar of the product of the mines would be taxed without one dollar's expense to the miner in addition to the tribute he now pays to the gold dust dealers. The Government simply takes this revenue out of their hands and places it in its own coffers, thereby inevitably controlling the money market, in defiance of gold gamblers, by the simple process of having all the gold it wants without depending on their good pleasure.

The present and recent position of monetary affairs would soon be reversed, and the Secretary of the Treasury would command the financial situation, instead of being commanded, and could dictate terms to Wall Street instead of being himself the subject of insolent and abusive dictation. Again we express our gratification at the proposed inauguration of this system of taxing the mines.

The gossip about Queen Victoria and the Scotch guardsman Brown is revived. He was formerly a sort of out-door body servant to Prince Albert, and indeed bears a strong resemblance to the Prince. She is said to have been so much attracted by his constant nearness to her person, at all her palaces, and in all her journeys to and from the various courts, that she has become very jealous of him. The last story is that she is going to marry him.

A philosophical London cabman speaks thus of a species of war, which he makes his trade. "You run over a younger fellow here, the fellow don't say nothing, but they have got many children and no wittles for 'em—but you just run over a goat or a kid, or a cow or a pig, and I'm blest if a word ain't arter you in two minutes."
